Re: Pollution

It is illogical to continue powering the world with pollutants accumulating out of control, impossible to neutralize. It is a shortage of common sense to continue ignoring a fouled environment that is contaminating and destroying food sources and life.

The excuse that nuclear and oil energies are the only way to go is an untruth. People managed before them. Continuing yet knowing that death awaits shows a lack of sense and sanity.

To survive, intelligent people stop, regroup and find safer alternatives, costlier or not. Life has a priority over profits. Just look at the stricken creatures exposed to pollutants by humans. And diseases come with pollutions; pollutions mean death.

Don't believe the nonsense that dead planets like Mars can be brought to life as a solution. Even if there was hope, only a few select people could escape -- and they had better be creative and nonsterile to survive.

Besides, to be logical, planet Earth has an atmosphere already and it still has vast wastelands with no prospects for improvements.

The Earth is like the Titanic -- without enough lifeboats -- only more so. Learn other swim strokes or go under.

We need smarter planners and thoughtful, sensible leaders who do not avoid issues about the environment, not cold-blooded yahoos afraid to seek alternatives.

Life comes before greed, monetary rewards and vanities.
